Theme: Towards humanistic, organizational, and societal well-being amid the pandemic

The coronavirus pandemic is not simply a healthcare and biological problem. It has significantly affected multiple dimensions in our lives, such as human interactions, management of businesses, and the well-being of our society and the planet. Within this context, businesses, organizations, and various institutions play pivotal roles in our society's continuing response to the pandemic. Thus, JBES calls for research articles that provide insights on how we can flourish multiple forms of well-being and integral human development amid the pandemic situation. We are interested to understand the emerging interactions of stakeholders, organizations, and the general macroenvironment in response to the new normal.

We are looking for papers that specifically address any of these areas within the pandemic context:

- Business ethics
- Business and management education
- Humanistic management
- Integral human development in organizations
- Social entrepreneurship
- Social innovation
- Spirituality and faith in organizations
- Sustainability
- Well-being in organizations
